

For Immediate Release 8/28/13

TechSource President and CEO Brian D’Andrea announces Dr. David Crandall has joined TechSource.

“I am pleased to announce that Dr. Crandall will be joining TechSource in a senior advisory role. His experience and expertise is noted throughout the industry and we are fortunate that he is now part of the TechSource Team. The breadth and depth of his knowledge reaffirms our dedication to provide the highest caliber of advice and support to our clients. We look forward to the addition of Dr. Crandall to our Team.”

Dr. Crandall recently retired from the Department of Energy (DOE) as the Advisor to the Under Secretary for Science. Prior to his Advisor role he served as the National Nuclear Security Administration’s (NNSA) Chief Scientist.

Dr. Crandall began his Federal career at Oak Ridge National Laboratory, moving to DOE’s Office of Energy Research (now Science) before transferring to Defense Programs where he served as Director of the Offices of National Ignition Facility, Inertial Fusion and Defense Sciences.

Dr. Crandall’s experience includes 16 years of physics research, 25 years of science program management, and 5 years as senior advisor to political appointees at DOE. He has led significant scientific programs in plasma physics and Fusion Energy and in Nuclear Weapon Stockpile Stewardship. Dr. Crandall entered the Federal Senior Executive Service in 1987.

Dr. Crandall is a recipient of the Presidential Award for Meritorious Executives. He is a Fellow of the American Physical Society cited for his work on atomic collisions involving multiply-charged ions and has published over 100 refereed publications.
