TechSource Celebrates 25 Years

Los Alamos, NM. TechSource, an award-winning science and engineering consultancy, is celebrating 25 years of providing hard-to-find expertise that ensures our clients meet their mission through the delivery of impactful, implementable, and innovative solutions.

In 1997, Drs. Tom Ward and Pierre Grand founded TechSource to pursue the development of accelerator technology. During that time in our nation's history of downsizing, they saw the nation needed to engage and retain subject matter experts that the national labs would require in the future. Their vision became a reality when Los Alamos National Laboratory became their first client and quickly expanded.

Current CEO and Chairman of the Board, V. Brian D'Andrea, who joined the company in 2001, was tasked with driving growth while remaining true to the company's founding principles. Under D'Andrea's leadership, what started as a small, exclusive group of linear particle accelerator science and engineering experts, has grown into a company of over 500 diverse senior level scientists, engineers, and industry leaders capable of supplying expert services to projects and programs across the NSE. The company has evolved into capabilities spanning the needs of the nation.

"From test bench to major program management to congressional testimony we have delivered results, stayed true to our roots, and created a company as exceptional as our expertise. As we celebrate our 25th anniversary we are grateful and are dedicated to maintain our zeal to push through boundaries to ensure we continue to deliver the results our clients have come to depend on," says D'Andrea. "It has been a memorable journey. I am truly honored to be working alongside such an intelligent, hardworking, and dedicated team of professionals."
